5. The article proposed to the journal undergoes anonymization after an initial review of its content, ensuring its originality and adherence to JSPR publication standards.
6. Two experts in the field, external to the author's institution, are appointed for evaluation. If the evaluation is positive, the article is published; otherwise, it is rejected. In cases of conflicting reviews (one favorable, the other unfavorable), a third expert is designated to resolve the matter. If revisions are requested, the author must make them within one month. Subsequently, these revisions are approved by the expert who suggested them before obtaining the final publication decision.
7. In the event that the editor-in-chief does not receive a response from the expert within one month, a reminder is sent, providing a further fifteen (15) days. If no response is received, the expert is replaced. (Articles submitted to the journal are not returned to the authors; they are either accepted or rejected).
