1. INTRODUCTION:

The family is known to be the first social institution in which the child is raised and interacts with its members. This has made it the first place in terms of performing a range of functions that no other institution can perform and thus affects the personal development of its members in the early stages, which is responsible for the construction of the social and cultural personality... Even more, their impact is carried out deep into the child's mind and this has made them play a significant role in the process of socialization and social control.

So that the age of globalization and the rapid spread and ease of use of information technology and modern technologies to make them occupy great roles within societies and transfer them to human values and social relations, This has influenced the nature of relationships in their general sense, especially within the family context, Which made this communication change unlike the communication in the old family The Algerian family in general has been dominated by virtual communication and communication; This is not a prejudgment but rather a set of remarks that have made us care about and study such topics.

Among the most important reasons for changing the pattern of family culture, changing their functions, poor communication and family communication were globalization in general and the evolution of these places within this globalization. The family members' use of digital means for long periods made the network of family relations lose its vitality.

The scale of the dangers that have come to threaten the Algerian family is that globalization is an inevitable phenomenon with which to live. Globalization is not only an economic phenomenon, it has dimensions that it works on in the transition of ideas and social problems that seek to mix cultures or conflict within one society. s social reality, and in this humble article we will clarify the relationship between globalization and family communication.

Before we go into this, we must make it clear to the reader that this article does not care about the concepts as much as it does about the relationship between globalization and family communication. It is a comprehensive view of family and family communication as well as globalization. By detailing and analyzing each of the concepts, our article's questions will be:

- What is family contact?
- What is the concept of globalization?
- What does family communication relate to globalization? (Impact of globalization on family communication).

2. Conceptual input:

the conceptual phase is essential in any scientific research and in any study and cannot be dispensed with by any researcher in the field of social and human sciences, it clarifies to the reader what that concept is and what its purpose is. and therefore, this is an important stage that plays a significant role in scientific research, so that the concepts of this article are:

Family: What is worth mentioning is that the concept of family refers to many meanings and concepts. Some see it as a group of individuals. And some people think it's broader and more inclusive than that by considering it a social institution, But what made the term family has many meanings is that it is a term that trades in a lot of disciplines and each has a starting point in its definition and view of the family according to its specialization, which has made the term family a lot of meanings.

Based on the foregoing, we will provide some definitions of the family:

So that the family is defined as a fundamental and permanent social institution and group, it is a major social system that contains within it a set of methods and functions that reflect the system that occurs between its members (Ibrahim Bin Mubarak Al-Jawair, 2009, pp. 01-19).

From this point of view, we can say that the family is the foundation of societies and the basis for their growth and development. Because it is the first institution responsible for teaching its members the foundations, values and principles taught by the foundations of this system, In our view, if individuals do not learn these principles and values within their family, it is impossible for them to learn them abroad in their community. The family is therefore responsible for the education of its members in all aspects of society's customs and values. This is a form of organization carried out by the family.

The family is also known to be a group of individuals who are associated with marriage and blood, live one living and interact with each other within the boundaries of their roles: husband, wife, father, mother, brother and sister, and form a common culture (Hassa bint Saleh al-Malik, 2006, p. 14).

This definition looks at the family from a narrow angle, so that it considers it to be people whose interaction is fairly true. But the question arises whether this interaction that we see today in our families is the same as that that was prevailing in old families. It is true that the family can be seen as a group of people who develop interaction among themselves, but this definition remains incomplete because the family is more inclusive and broader because it is a social institution that carries out many of the functions that demonstrate that the family is one of the most important social institutions in society despite the many changes that have taken place in these changes.

So that it is known by a son of perspective who, in my view, is a comprehensive definition of the family that indicates its importance by saying, "It is the fortified shield by which man is sheltered when needed and strengthened" (Ahmed Abdul Latif Abu Assad & Al Khattina, 2014, p. 37)

So by inferring the importance of the family and the role it plays in society, individuals cannot dispense with their families because it is the force with which they face the problems of this life, and because it is the first institution in which the individual learns the lessons of social life, which enables him to understand the principles he is following according to his society.

With the multiplicity of these definitions that have been developed by researchers and specialists in various disciplines of the concept of the family, we can combine these definitions in a simple and comprehensive definition that is that the family is a social, cultural and educational institution, etc. it consists of a group of individuals (husband - wife - children) they live in one house and play roles and functions through their interaction with each other, the family is the basis of these societies if the reconciliation of society and vice versa if the corruption of society.

In fact, we can say that there is no known definition of the concept of family communication, but the definitions and concepts of the concept of family communication have been varied, like any term, every researcher has his or her view on this type of communication that occurs within the family.

Family communication is the scientific study that suggests and describes what happens between the members of the same family of communication, whether this communication is positive, negative, direct or indirect, in order to identify the forces affecting them and adopt appropriate methods to support them and then influence each member of their relationship with the other (Abdullah Masoud Al-Omari Al-Zahrani, 2020, p. 654).

So through this definition, we can say that family communication is true is in itself a description of the relationships that arise between family members, because the quality of communication within the family determines the quality of relationships between its members, because this is what is observed a lot in some families and even our families. if the communication is positive, there are strong relationships and vice versa, if this communication is negative, it will of course affect the relationships between family members.

Family communication is defined as more than just the exchange of words between family members, it has components such as facial expression, body language, and speech tone, it is a state through which verbal and non-verbal information is exchanged between family (Sarah Ali Al-Aswad, 2021, p. 110).

Therefore, we conclude from this that family communication is not always verbal communication, but may be non-verbal communication. this means that it can be by symbols or signs, etc. once you symbolize a person in your family who understands what is meant by it, this becomes a communication that leads to an interaction between them and therefore you must understand that communication is not always by words and expressions of thoughts by speech may be by signs and signals, etc.

Globalization: If we want to define globalization, we must know that there are many definitions that have been presented to it so that there are varied views on this term, some of them gave it a general definition and some gave it a special definition. there are those who view it as a social phenomenon while others see it as a dependency of Western countries, and in this sense we will present some definitions that illustrate this concept

The term globalization is a newly emerging term but has been planned since early this term means the universality of customs, traditions, values and cultures, for the benefit of the economically developed world (Suleiman bin Saleh Al-Harashi, p. 07).

So by this definition we conclude that globalization is an attempt to dominate the values, customs and cultures of the Western world over the rest of the world, especially the economically unpowerful countries. The concept of globalization is a concept that carries a lot of subtleties, many know this term but do not understand it and do not understand its meaning. As we said earlier, the concept of globalization is a concept that expresses dependence on Western countries in terms of values, customs, traditions, cultures, etc.

Globalization is defined as a social phenomenon and a new stage in the development of the global capitalist system through which it attempts to spread a set of political, social, economic and cultural values (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021).

Globalization is also defined as the phenomenon of global belonging in its general sense and is a brief expression of concepts that emphasize exit from limited frameworks and include global affiliation more generally in its economic aspect include trade openness and the abolition of trade restrictions, and in its intellectual and cultural aspect include openness from the other and non-closure on the self. he rejected the intellectual bigotry calling for the abolition of the other (Suleiman bin Saleh Al-Harashi, pp. 07-08).

From the above, a comprehensive definition can be given that combines all the definitions we have presented previously, namely that globalization is the process in which an attempt is made to generalize in all sectors and economic, social, cultural, etc. so that these Western countries try to make all the countries subordinate to them. so we can say that it is this information revolution and explosion, which seeks to integrate all the cultures of the world into Western countries.

Since the topic of our article focuses on the process of communication and family communication within the family as well as globalization, we will try through this to know the impact of this globalization on this communication, we must not deny the positive aspect of this globalization and its provision to individuals of knowledge of friends and ease of communication and communication. but we must not forget its many disadvantages, especially in the family environment, because at the same time they contributed to the destabilization of the relations of association, which led to the weakness and absence of what is known as family communication and this is the important aspect in this article. These were the most important concepts related to our subject that we had to explain to the reader, because they are the ones that make it easier for him to understand these terms and make him more understanding of this subject and can provide him with an overview of this subject.

A theoretical approach: An analytical sociological view of the relationship between research terms

Before we begin to give this sociological and analytical vision about the relationship between family communication and globalization, or how this globalization and its development have affected this kind of communication, we must begin to clarify the types of each of these concepts, because this type of topic must start from the private to the public. without our knowledge, for example, of family types and functions, types of family communication and patterns, as well as types of globalization, it is difficult to give this sociological and analytical vision about the relationship between them, knowing these types may facilitate access in giving this analytical vision, and may clarify and facilitate the reader to understand this vision that we will reach. In addition to that this vision requires us to know the functions of the family, especially since the topic of this article focuses on the impact of globalization on it, it is known that the development of this globalization has affected many of the functions that were performed by the family, which is one of the basics on which it is based. the reality of what we see today within some families and even our families is that this communication is almost non-existent between family members, and the reason for all this is the development of globalization, so reaching this sociological view requires us to dismantle and analyze all concepts.

Types of families: If we put forward such titles, it was not a coincidence, but in order to reach a sociological view and vision on the relationship between family communication and globalization, what we see today is a sociological observation that there is only one type of family. unlike the family in the past, there were many divisions and types of family, but there remain two types of families known and common to many researchers in the family field, which are as follows:

Nuclear family: This is the common type in our time, which was few in the old families, the nuclear family is a structure composed of men, women and their unmarried children, who live in one house, so that this type of families is the nucleus of the current society. the smallest social unit known, many researchers believe that the nuclear family is essentially a characteristic of industrial societies, where individuals are economically independent from their families and have their own income (Ahmed Abdul Latif Abu Assad & Al Khattina, 2014, p. 38)

It is our view as specialists in the social sciences that are interested in these topics that this type of families is a cause of the weakness of family relations, because the separation of family members from each other is what increases the tension of the relationship between them, which leads to weakness and severance of these relations.

The extended family: It is the opposite of the nuclear family, so that this type of family in our time has become little and more than that it is almost non-existent, the extended family is a social structure consisting of two or more families who all reside in the same house. they are often related to each other and often combined with a particular work as in farming communities, so that the family in this pattern remains in contact between generations (Ahmed Abdul Latif Abu Assad & Al Khattina, 2014, p. 39).

So we conclude from this that this kind of family was dominated by a kind of strong relationship between its members, because they were always in contact with each other, as is seen, for example, in rural communities where this type and pattern still prevails, even if it is small. the relationships between the entire family members are strong and interconnected, unlike the nuclear family, which is why we said earlier that the nuclear family prevalent in our time is one of the most important reasons for the weakness of relationships.

Family functions: There is a fact that cannot be ignored and cannot be denied by anyone is that the family performs a set of functions that are the basis of its stability and stability, and still to date do some of these functions, however, we must not forget that many of these functions have become unfulfilled by the family, to be replaced by other institutions that do this, making the family relations between these families weak. the question that arises and concerns many researchers is what are the most important reasons why this family does not perform these functions?

From our point of view, there are a lot of reasons why the family does not perform much of its functions, such as changing the lifestyle. parental preoccupation, women's work exit, etc., but the most important reason remains the evolution of this globalization. not only did the development of globalization affect family communication but it went beyond it by affecting the whole of family relations, Which is why there are some family problems that the family knows about today. Therefore, we have already said that we need to know the most important of these functions that were performed by the family in order to get a look at the relationship between family communication and globalization. The most important of these functions will be presented briefly:

- Social function: This job is one of the most important and prominent functions of the family, but what is noticed today is that this job, if it can be said that it has disappeared and the family is not interested in it, but other institutions have emerged and the origin is that this job starts from within the family.

This function is to teach individuals to comply with the demands of society, to integrate into their culture, to follow their traditions and to submit to their obligations (Ahmed Abdul Latif Abu Assad & Al Khattina, 2014, p. 42).

- Economic function: It can be said from our perspective that this job is the only job that the family continues to perform even if some changes appear, the family continues to provide its members with clothing, food, drink and shelter (Dlasi Hamad, p. 114).

So we conclude that the economic function of the family is to provide all individuals with all the material needs as mentioned above. This is in order to ensure their stability and stability, the family's failure to provide these needs s rights ", which renders their relationships incoherent, giving rise to problems that are an obstacle to them and to all their members and thus this function is tantamount to ensuring a decent living for their members.

- Psychological function: This function is one of the most important and most prominent as well family", carried out by the family on the basis of good treatment between family members, Based on love, respect and tenderness, by respecting individuals' feelings, The psychological function in many families is not important and in fact the opposite is because giving and feeling people love and tenderness makes them trust themselves, creating strong ties between them.

It is well known that individuals are influenced by the prevailing psychological climate in the family and by the relationships between father and mother, and acquire their psychological orientation by imitating parents, hence the relationships and mutual feeling between family members (Father - Mother) (Parents - Sons) (Sons each other) It is of great importance because if this feeling encounters any obstacles or dissolution, relations within the family become turbulent leading to the family's disintegration and weak relationships (Ahmed Abdul Latif Abu Assad & Al Khattina, 2014, p. 41).

So through this presentation we infer to the various thoughts that psychological function is as important within the family as any other function. by taking into account all his feelings, Psychological function is one of the reasons why relationships between family members are interconnected. And, in our view, this job can also be considered the most comprehensive because other jobs can be performed, In other words, if the psychological function is not within the family, it is impossible for the family to perform other functions The sum of the other functions depends on this psychological function, because relationships that are based on love, respect and respect for the other's feelings make the family perform the other functions.

- Biological function: The family's biological function is something that can be considered essential in this function: providing the family with health and physical care for individuals.

Many family researchers consider that this function carries out several tasks within the family, which can be restricted to:

- Biological function preserves offspring.
- Biological function prevents genealogy.
- Biological function protects future generations.
- The important thing in the biological function is that it ensures the continuity of society (Bassam Muhammad Abu Alian, 2013, p. 59).

These were the most important and common public functions performed by the family, since there are some other functions, even if they are considered important within the family, we have provided a comprehensive and general view of these functions, which are the foundation and stability of the family and the interconnectedness of its members.

But what I would like to add is that there are some other functions, even if they are considered personal, they can be added to the posts mentioned earlier:

- Intellectual function: The family is known to be the institution responsible for educating its members for various ideas that are in line with society as a whole and the family in particular.

- Cultural function: by educating its members in accordance with the culture of society.

- Religious function: It is the family's responsibility to teach its members about religious foundations such as prayer.

- Alert function: Some readers may be surprised by this article from this term "Alert", but this will be made clear, namely that it is the family that is responsible for alerting its members to everything that is harmful to them and what benefits them, That is, they are responsible for teaching their members a set of values and principles that are consistent with their society and that it is responsible for alerting its members about the set of values and principles that are contrary to their society, thereby making the family an alert function.

- Types of family communication: After explaining to the reader in our article this humble for the types of family and the functions you perform We must also explain to him the kinds of communication that happens within the family. We put this to these headlines, which are the starting point from private to public, is easy and we must conclude the analytical vision of the impact of globalization on this family connection. The types of communication within the family are divided into three types:

- Contact between parents (spouses): This communication indicates the relationship between the spouses in which each of their thoughts, feelings and feelings are conveyed to each other so that this type of communication is the basis of the family, Because it has an impact on all members of the family, if this contact between these spouses is weak, then the contact between the parents and the children can be weak; Also, the contact between each other's sons may be weak. And that's why we said that communication between parents is the foundation of the family.

- Communication between parents and children: the relationship between parents and children in which each of their thoughts and feelings are conveyed to the other party so that this communication is based on the education of the children, because the primary source from which the children learn is first from within the family And this type of communication also has an impact on family members, If contact between children and mothers, for example, is weak, it can affect them, which may cause them to not contact each other, It may also make contact between children and the father weak, which affects their relationships.

- Contact between children: this communication is the result of communication between parents and the result of communication between parents and children in the sense that if the contact is between the parents, between the parents and the children positive, of course the contact between the children is positive, and the relationships between the parents and between parents and children, as well as the basis for contact between children This is why we consider this type of communication to be the result of contact between the parents, i.e. the spouses, and between the parents and the children.

Contact between children is the relationship that arises between these children, in which each other's thoughts, feelings and feelings are conveyed to the other side that makes their relationships strong and interconnected.

- Family communication patterns: The variety of family communication patterns varies, just as it has the types discussed earlier, it has the patterns as well Family communication is known to be a communication process between a sender and a future, As long as it's a process, it has a way in which it's done, and that's what the patterns mean. Each family has its own way of doing this or uses a pattern in this communication process. Generally speaking, family communication patterns are divided into three types:

- Open communication pattern: Through the word open communication, it understands the intent, since such communication, whether between parents or between parents and children or between children, is entirely free and one of the most important patterns that makes family relations strong and interconnected.

So that achieving the mutual needs of the family is desirable and desirable, and therefore this type of communication is not restricted but freely as we said earlier, and is characterized by harmony, respect, honesty, honesty and a sense of feelings of the other party, so that at the outset we consider that it makes relationships and ties between family members strong (Shaligam Ghani & Hamani Fadil, p. 05).

- Closed communication pattern: This is the opposite of open communication, because this type of communication is not free but is governed by a range of limitations, and in our view this is the pattern currently prevailing in many families, which results in poor communication between family members, and therefore poor family relationships.

So that the patterns of communication and interaction between spouses and sons and even between sons of each other are governed by a set of strict rules. those rules, whether visible or implied, determine what can be expressed, This makes contact so weak that the individual does not care and does not express some thoughts that matter to him because he is not given the freedom to express his opinion. family relations ", resulting in the absence of such contact between them and thus the weakness and disintegration of family relations (Shaligam Ghani & Hamani Fadil, pp. 5- 6).

- The pattern of enclosed entanglement: In this pattern, the family is very close to its members and in intertwined formats, it is difficult to find autonomy and subjectivity, we even find a lack of privacy and individual differences are unbearable (Shaligam Ghani & Hamani Fadil, p. 06).

So we finally conclude from our thoughts that these patterns and the way family members communicate are of great importance within the family, through which relationships are formed, and through which they are also evolving, so it can be said that the way of communication determines the quality of relationships.

- Globalization between species and advantages: If we want to gain access to analytical sociological perspectives, we also need to know about the types and advantages of globalization, because the term globalization is multifaceted and multifaceted, and as positive as it is, it has downsides as well.

- Types of globalization: Globalization as a political process has many types and constituent units. There is political globalization, there is economic globalization and there is cultural and social globalization. This will be briefly illustrated for each of the aforementioned types:

- Economic globalization: it means integrating all global economies into one economy, and according to the American vision, it means integrating and linking to the American economy based on free competition, liberalization of markets and trade and non-state intervention in that (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 29).

We therefore conclude that economic globalization, in its broad general sense, is economic dependence, and even more so, that globalization is the dissemination of Western values in the economic sphere.

- Political globalization: Mainstreaming the Western paradigm in governance that believes in political freedom, party pluralism and democracy, and one manifestation of political globalization means the fall of dictatorships and democratic transitions in many countries (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 29).

Political globalization therefore means the integration of global policies and the dissemination of Western values in the political sphere.

- Cultural globalization: It means the mainstreaming of American culture among different cultures and societies through the transfer of ideas and values throughout the world. This process is characterized by the consumption and common use of pervasive cultures. One of the most prominent aspects of cultural globalization is the spread of fast food restaurants (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 29).

What can be inferred from what has been touched upon is that cultural globalization in its general sense is the dissemination of Western values in the field of culture such as the "dress code"

- Social globalization: In my view, social globalization and cultural globalization are equally meaningful terms, as evidenced by the fact that individuals' social needs are the same as cultural needs as well, in other words, cultural globalization can be said to be part of social globalization because social needs are broader and broader than cultural needs rather than have the same meaning. This is further illustrated by the fact that this kind of "social" globalization is concerned with the customs and traditions of society. Here, culture exists within these traditions.

It follows that social globalization is the dissemination of Western values in the social sphere, or the integration of social values in the world.

- The advantages of globalization: through the concept and types of globalization. s economic, cultural and social values, As it has downsides, it carries a lot of positives. that the secret lies in the ability of individuals, families and societies to interact and engage positively with them, Here, we will present the most important positive that globalization has brought both to society in general and to the family in particular.

So that our knowledge of the most important disadvantages that accompanied globalization as well makes it easier for us to conclude an analytical sociological view of the impact of globalization on family communication.

- Positive:

- Scientific revolution and knowledge explosion: One of the most significant pros of globalization is that it has opened up a wide space for individuals and societies to diverge from different areas of knowledge, knowledge has increased in this era as opposed to previous times, and anyone can enter this world and search for any political-economic topic... Etc (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 31).

- Promotion of human rights: This means that all these means have a major role to play in the protection and defence of human rights. One of these rights, which is guaranteed to the human person and which is one of the most important rights, is to give full freedom of expression to these sites and these means... etc (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 33).

This is evidenced by the activation of the media's role in detecting any human rights abuse through the adoption by a group of international organizations of a new world order in which dignity is preserved and the family is safeguarded. Among these regulations and ideas that safeguard human dignity, we find freedom of expression, which was not previously the case.

- Brought women out of isolation: Many researchers believe that this globalization has helped women to own some of their rights and freedom and to emerge from the social isolation imposed on them, and some of the customs and traditions that have restricted their movement (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 34).

But in my view, I consider this point, especially one of the disadvantages that globalization has presented. Women cannot be completely free, It has restrictions that can be imposed on it, and that's why I consider this point of negativity, Because this globalization has shattered these constraints, it has even made women contrary to certain customs, traditions and cultures that women should not abandon. which is the foundation of society.

An example of this is what we see in our societies in the dress code of "women" in another sense is the tradition of Arab women in general of Western women. This is contrary to their customs and traditions. There are many examples, but we have given the most obvious examples that indicate that this point is one of the negatives of globalization.

Finally, globalization can be said to have many advantages that cannot be confined to time, friends' knowledge and ease of research, but we have provided the important positives of globalization. which we observe in our pension reality.

- Its disadvantages: Although we have presented some of the advantages of globalization, this does not deny that it has many negatives that no one should deny. This has made it so debated by many researchers and scientists in this area that the most important negative aspects of globalization are:

- Dependence on others and marginalization of other cultures: as long as such dependence is considered a downside of globalization Why has it been considered a positive for globalization to bring women out of isolation, leading them to the subordination of certain Western values and customs and to forget their indigenous values, customs and cultures, So this is further confirmed that taking women out of isolation is one of the downsides of globalization and not a positive one, as previously stated in our analysis and critical insight into this point.

Perhaps one of the most significant shortcomings of globalization is the fact that cultures are becoming marginalized and constantly declining in the face of Western cultural tyranny, which has lost their resilience and survival (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 34).

- Identity imbalance and a crisis in values: the evolution of this globalization has disrupted societies' identity and a crisis in values which has led to the emergence of so-called self-conflict, and that is already what we are noticing today, especially among adolescents and young people. And even more, they see these extraneous values as a symbol of progress and civilization. and that adherence to their values and habits is an underdevelopment, and this is one of the most important disadvantages that globalization has presented and that we note very much in our social reality (Abdul Ghani Ahmed Ali Al-Hawari, 2021, p. 35).

These were the most significant negatives of globalization, but they have many other negatives that are not mentioned, such as family disintegration, the destabilization of family relations and the severance of the so-called womb connection, but this will be addressed in the researcher's analytical view. So, as a summary of what we have given to globalization, it is one of the most controversial topics that still arises because there are those who consider its positives to be more than its negatives. and there is a view to the exact opposite that considers its negatives and seriousness to be more than its positives and benefits, But from our point of view it is possible to combine the two opinions, because globalization is a double-edged weapon that has pros and cons. And that what determines that their negatives are more than their positives or vice versa It's the limits of dealing with it. There are those who use it more for downsides, and from this point of view globalization remains a double-edged weapon with a lot of positives and a lot of negatives.

- Family communication in the evolution of globalization "Analytical sociological view" of the impact of globalization on family communication:

As this subject of our article speaks to something family-related. family contact. which is one of the most important foundations of the family, we must start from the impact of globalization on the family at large until we reach its impact on family communication. Because a family without contact between its members cannot be considered an interrelated family relations ", because through communication between its members it creates so-called family relations.

The evolution of this globalization, which has emerged within the family, has led to the further emergence of family problems and disagreements that were not known to the family in the past, because the emergence of this globalization has led to the emergence of some unethical factors and manifestations, and some behaviours that have further exacerbated problems within the family, for example: "Infidelity" is such that such infidelity in the family has been minimal or non-existent, but with the advent of these sites it has become easy for men and women to engage in such immoral behaviour, which of course leads to the breakup of the family and the severance of its relations.

Even more so, as these means develop, it can be said that the role of the family has generally decreased, which is demonstrated by changing certain functions of the family. and the absence of others, such as in terms of educational functionality With the advent and evolution of these means, the role of the family has become secondary. This in turn also affects relationships between family members, which may lead to the family's disintegration.

So what we have come to see in a time of globalization within the family is the opposite of what we see in old families. Parents have been responsible for education, education, upbringing, etc. This is why we say that the family is old even if some problems arise, but these problems cannot lead to family disintegration.

Since this globalization has given rise to many family problems and changed many jobs, it may, of course, affect communication between family members. family communication in a time of globalization is an absent factor within the family, Unlike the communication that used to be one of the most important reasons for families' stability and harmony The family was an interactive family that all its members interacted with each other. What we notice today, even in our families, is that family members are a group brought together by one house. But each of them has its own virtual world, in which he finds more comfort than interaction with family members, you may find that the son is in one place with the father, but he is busy in these locations. Or conversely, globalization is invading these families. And what's more, you might find two people in the same house, but they're interacting with their family's subjects and ideas on these sites. More importantly, this interaction with these opinions and ideas should be through communication and interaction between them. and this is one of the most important reasons for the absence of communication between family members.

So what we can say is that this communication in a time of globalization and the evolution of its means is almost absent within the same family and even more so, the individual is more interested in those means than in what is happening within his family. Until this individual gets everything from these means, Even his dialogues, debates and amusement are getting them from these means. family ", rather than obtaining it within his family, which resulted in the absence of so-called family contact between family members, This is why we identify the risks and problems that result from this lack of communication:

- The absence of family contact is the cause of the family's disintegration and the reason for the poor relations between family members in general.

- The absence of family contact is a cause of hostility and malice among members of the same family.

- The absence of family contact makes the family always fraught and tense.

- The absence of family contact between family members results in the family's failure to fulfil many of the basic functions underlying the family.

So by this explanation of the risks of the absence of such contact, we can conclude a fundamental point, namely that family communication has an effective and important role within the family, the latter which makes the relationships strong among its members and through which the family works to achieve a lot of functions that ensure its stability and interconnectedness.

Conclusion:

The conclusion reached after we touched on many ideas that this communication and communication process within the family became hypothetical In a time of globalization, the individual is far from interactions within his or her family, It became linked to virtual interactions, which made many of the family's functions change to become the means for which it was responsible to globalize. That's what made the family face so many problems and conflicts. And so these relationships and this virtual communication no matter how calm or stable the family contact is, which is one of the reasons why the family lives in a state of calm and stability.

- Suggestions and recommendations:

In order to strengthen the communication process within the family, we can make some suggestions and recommendations.

- Adequate time must be allocated for sitting with family members and exchanging ideas both in and outside the family.

The communication process and dialogue within the family must be activated, especially between parents and children.

- Monitoring children when dealing with these virtual means (because children are the individuals most affected by this globalization)

- The need to use so-called globalization in its positives and know the limits of dealing with it.
