Journal Introduction

The Herodote Journal for Humanities and Social Sciences is a peer-reviewed publication issued quarterly, regularly overseen by a national and international scientific committee comprising prominent thinkers from Algeria and the Arab world. It is published both electronically and in print by the Herodote Foundation for Scientific Research and Training.

The journal focuses on the fields of social and human sciences, with publications in three languages: Arabic, English, and French. Its primary aim is to promote scientific research by publishing serious and purposeful studies that highlight researchers' contributions to the field of knowledge. It also seeks to encourage national and Arab scientific competencies to engage in research and scientific publishing while fostering scientific communication and constructive collaboration among various scientific elites. These efforts aim to advance scientific research and disseminate knowledge.

The journal is free and open-access, making it readily available to students and researchers.

Editorial

Since its establishment in 2017, the Herodote Journal has been diligently working to promote scientific research. It continues its academic endeavors in collaboration with a distinguished group of researchers and professors in Algeria and the Arab world. The journal strives to provide free scientific support for publication through its pages, ensuring it remains an effective academic platform within the system of research and scientific publishing.

With the release of its first special issue in English, the journal reaffirms its commitment to continuity and persistent effort. Through its website, it expresses full support for all rigorous scientific studies that advance research in the humanities and social sciences.

This issue has been realized through the remarkable academic contributions of Dr. Souhila Kerdine from the Department of Archaeology at the University of Algiers 2. As the Assistant Editor-in-Chief of the journal and a researcher in the field of archaeology, Dr. Kerdine provided both scientific and technical supervision for this special issue, which focuses on archaeological sites and heritage. At Herodote, we commend her initiative and efforts, and we welcome all researchers to collaborate in producing special issues in English. These efforts aim to promote Algeria's cultural tourism and further the development of scientific research in this critical field.

The academic effort we dedicate to supporting scientific research aligns with our responsibility to honor the legacy of our martyrs and uphold it through continuous work, diligence, and distinguished scientific research.

Once again, congratulations to the researchers whose articles were published in this issue. We eagerly anticipate upcoming issues for those whose work is still under review and follow-up. We wish all researchers success in their scientific endeavors, as research remains the only path to scientific advancement and serving our nations amid current and future global changes.

Editor-in-Chief

Professor Dr. Abdelmalek Slatnia

Department of History, University of Algiers 2
